-be brave in the face of difficulties and death

I chose the picture of my friend Sharon to express courage. Sharon loved to ski since she was 10. She sprained her back and needed surgery five years ago. When the doctor announced she could not ski again, she felt frustrated and thought she lost her spiritual pillar. But she never gave up. She tried all the possible ways of rehabilitation and eventually could ski again. Normal people who are not injured can hardly do what she is doing in the picture, which is jumping from a 4-meters steeply takeoff ramp. But she did. This picture expresses her passion to snowboard and the courage to overcome difficulties in her life. And she is so brave to face the difficulties in the life. The second picture depicts cemetery in the Boston University. I chose this picture because I found many people are afraid of death. But when people did be brave to face many challenges, find their meaning of life and contribute to the world, They would be eternal for countless people.
